If you or your family are living with cancer and struggling to cope with its financial impact, there is help available. When you or someone close to you has been diagnosed with cancer, your job and money may not be the first things you think about. But having cancer can be expensive. Your or your family's income may go down and your spending may go up. You may have to pay for a special diet, child care, higher heating costs or travel to a hospital. It may be hard to keep your job.
